Migration and mental health

Swaran P. Singh

The history of humanity is a story of migrants. Gradual migration was the progenitor of trade, innovations, war and epidemics. Recent rapid migration across vast cultural landscapes can bewilder both migrants and hosts. Migrants experience contrary emotions juxtaposed: grief and renewal, loss and hope, separation and assimilation. The host feels invaded. The results, positive health or mental illness, arise from this complex, multilayered interplay – there is no inevitability of outcome. Our relationship with land is intergenerational: the land where our ancestors lived and which our children inherit. As migrants develop such cross-generational links with their new land, flourishing replaces distress.
Migration and mental health – in 100 words
Swaran P. Singh
Access the most recent version at DOI: 10.1192/bjp.bp.111.100743

References
This article cites 0 articles, 0 of which you can access for free at:
http://bjp.rcpsych.org/content/200/2/155#BIBL

Reprints/permissions
To obtain reprints or permission to reproduce material from this paper, please write to permissions@rcpsych.ac.uk

You can respond to this article at /letters/submit/bjprcpsych;200/2/155

Downloaded from http://bjp.rcpsych.org/ on October 30, 2017
Published by The Royal College of Psychiatrists

To subscribe to The British Journal of Psychiatry go to:
http://bjp.rcpsych.org/site/subscriptions/